3.3 Million TV Households Still Completely Unready for DTV

As of May 10, 2009

Albuquerque-Santa Fe least ready of 56 local metered markets

3.3 million or 2.9% of U.S. TV households remain completely unready for the transition to all digital broadcast that will take place on June 12, 2009. That is an improvement more than 200,000 households in two weeks with just over four weeks until the transition.

Nielsen's readiness data are based on sets and households in our National People Meter panel, which is projectable to U.S. television households, and our local metered panels, which are projectable to their respective television household populations.

Some key trends at the national level include:

- In the last two weeks, the penetration of Completely Unready households in the U.S. declined two-tenths of a percentage point to 2.9% or 3.3 million households.
- Asian households improved readiness by seven-tenths of a percentage point, dropping to 3.4% completely unready
- There was improvement in the level of preparedness among African American and Hispanic households, but both groups remain less ready than the national average.
- Households headed by younger adults continue to progress toward preparedness with a three-tenths of percentage point improvement. Households headed by older adults are better prepared than the national average.
